We are all apt to be impatient to see the fruit of our labour. We forget that there is not royal road to anything and that true success to be obtained only by hardwork, and we, therefore, behave like the farmer who sowed the seed and went the next morning to see crops. We must not yield to despair because our efforts are not crowned with success, but toil on with patience and perseverance which overcomes mountains. Slow progress must not make us impatient and difficulties must not discourage us. All great undertakings demand mature deliberation which must be given to them not only at the very beginning, but also at their different stages. Our great success consists of parts which must be completed one after the other. Anything hastily done is only meant for undoing. A youth cannot become a good athlete, nor a student, a good scholar. If the former does not take infinite pains and hard training, and the later does not devote himself in earnest to his studies. 11
